HISTORICAL DESCRIPTION

The American Pharmaceutical Association was organized in Philadelphia in 1852 and chartered in Washington in 1888. It has members in all states, Panama, the Philippines, Canada, Cuba, Mexico, and other foreign countries. Each year the Association holds its annual meetings in different sections of the country.

The American Institute of Pharmacy, erected by the American Pharmaceutical Association, houses the Association activities which include the revision of the National Formulary and cooperates in the revision of the United States Pharmacopoeia both legal standards in National and State Food and Drug Laws. The Association cooperates with state and national associations that have to do with the drug industry and pharmacy. The work done here is in the interest of public health and legislation concerned with its promotion.

The selection of the site was made by vote of members in all the states and an Act of Congress confirmed the location. The Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission were consulted frequently about the design and location of this building which is the first of the monumental buildings along Constitution Avenue to be seen from the Arlington Memorial Bridge, and is an important part of the frame of the Lincoln Memorial. Contributions for the site and building were made by pharmacists of all states, United States possessions, Panama, Cuba, Mexico, and England. The design of the building was prepared by John Russell Pope, the well-known architect; the structure is a notable addition to the group of buildings along the Mall devoted to fine arts, science and education. The design of this building conforms to the ideals of the Commission of Fine Arts which approved the design and the plan for its location. The building has a library and museum and will have a laboratory for work in the standards.
